Before dying by suicide, many people send warning signs that they are contemplating ending their own lives.

As a professional who may have contact with someone considering suicide, your conversation with them could help save a life.

QPR is an evidence-based emergency mental health intervention consisting of three, simple, practical steps that anyone can do to reduce immediate risk of suicide and help someone access longer term care.

As a result of this training, participants will be able to:

- Recognize warning signs when someone may be thinking about suicide.
- Question someone about their risk of suicide.
- Offer hope and persuade them to live.
- Take steps to connect them to resources for ongoing care.
